

The World Wide Nationalist Conservative Movement The British Election

© 2019 Joel Goodman

Donald Trump's upcoming victory in 2020 should be a message for the Republican Party.

If the election in Great Britain yesterday is any indication, there is a movement afoot than spans the Atlantic.

One component of America's traditional strength is American Nationalism; a belief consisting of a patriotic love of country, a taking care of Americans first - keeping America strong for all its citizens. Trump's policies as they come to fruition and bring success across a full spectrum of American life, have led to America rediscovering itself.

If the 2019 election in Great Britain is looked at as an indicator of what very soon could be happening in America, it would appear that there is a common element to world wide Conservatism.

A political component shared by the Boris Johnson's English Conservative Party and the Donald Trump Presidency is a focus on anti-Globalism. The Brexit movement is not just anti-European Union, it is at its core an England first / anti-Globalist position.

It appears that aside from Brexit, all else went out the window in the British election. The British Conservatives have trounced Labour in the largest win for the Conservatives since the 1980's and the largest loss for Labour since the 1960's.

One Labour leader, former adviser to Labour PM Tony Blair Alastair Campbell said: "This is not just a defeat for Jeremy Corbyn, this is a defeat for the politics he represents." Several Labour leaders have commented that Brexit and Anti-Semitism were two issues that Labour could not overcome.

Trump's very recent Executive Order on Jewish hate crimes is apparently not just a convenient response to another Anti-Jewish hate crime. Trump understands the importance of protecting religious freedom and beset upon Jewish culture in particular. The Left around the world is growingly anti-Semitic. Many English voters saw that and abandoned Labour.

Labour leaders have quickly declared that Labour will remain Socialist and continue the fight for a more "just society." They said they were just overwhelmed by Brexit. It would appear that Socialist leaders on both sides of the Atlantic do not see the nationalist handwriting on the wall. Donald Trump and Boris Johnson do.

If one connects the movements in England, Hungary, Sweden, and Italy with Brexit to Trump's America first policy, the larger battle to defeat Globalism comes clearly into focus.

Millions of Pounds and American Dollars were poured into the Re-Brexit movement, a movement funded by such people as George Soros. But, attacks on nationalism have not been limited to England. Soros' money with the cooperation of the CIA and the State Department was also involved with the overthrow of the Yanukovich Government in Ukraine.

Putting corruption aside, Viktor Yanukovich's "crime" was that he wanted to stay neutral as regards an alignment with the EU; basically an anti-Globalist position, not much different at its core from Brexit.

The same forces that were at work in the Ukraine during the Maidan revolution that ousted Yanukovich were at work trying to defeat Trump's election bid and then to oust him after his presidential victory. The anti-Trump operation was being run by the coup masters at the CIA. What they have done for years overseas they finally brought home and did to Trump in the U.S.

Regardless of how the Democrats describe Trump's crimes in his up coming impeachment, his real crime is that he loves the USA and his policies are an existential threat to world wide Globalist hegemony

Obviously this enigma of a man named Trump has his finger on the pulse of America and the world. Hopefully more Republican politicians will understand the world wide battle we are facing, and take Trump more seriously as a leader in the fight against Globalism. English Conservative politicians and voters have shown they understand the fight. It will be America's turn next.